Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

The following is a quotation of the second paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention.

Claims 1 and 3 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention. For claim 1, it is unclear whether or not the "a panel body" in line 9 is the same panel body claimed previously. Also for claim 1, "said top plate" and "said engaging portion" lack antecedent basis.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1 and 3 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Valente (French reference 1,155,218). Valente teaches a thermal insulation box (Fig. 4) having a front panel (a; see attachment A) with a front frame member (b; see Attachment A), a panel body (c; see Attachment A), and insulation (d; see Attachment A) there between and a top panel (14) with a recessed front space (e; see Attachment A) that receives the front panel. There are corresponding engagement members on the front of the recessed front space of the top panel (the flat surface thereof) and the top of the front panel (seal 15); the seal being breakable, thereby making the front panel removable. For claim 1, Valente fails to teach that the panel body is specifically of synthetic resin. It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention to make the panel body any of a number of different materials, including out of synthetic resin, depending on the desired need of the person constructing the box, e.g. depending on the material readily available, depending on the specifications desired/required for the front panel, etc.

Art Unit: 3637

For claim 3, Valente fails to teach that the top panel includes a synthetic resin casing and foamed heat-insulating material therein. It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention to make the top panel out of any of a number of different materials, including out of synthetic resin, filling the inside thereof with foamed heat-insulating material, depending on the desired need of the person constructing the box, i.e. depending on the material readily available, depending on the specifications desired/required for the top panel, etc.

Note: the limitations directed to the ice-making machine appear in "for"/intended use statements and therefore have been given no weight in the claims. Furthermore, stating that the panel body is blow molded and that the heat-insulating material is obtained by foam molding are product by process limitations which are also given no weight in article claims. Finally, for the removable connection, it would have been an obvious consideration to add fasteners, such as screws/holes, tongue and groove connections, etc., between the top and front panels, to provide additional detachable securement means between the panels.

Response to Arguments

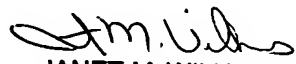

Applicant's arguments with respect to the claims have been considered but are moot in view of the new ground(s) of rejection.
